Executive Summary

Each of the 50 States and the District of Columbia regulates programs and individual counselors that offer specialty substance use disorder (SUD) treatment. This is done through licensure and certification, guided by State statute and regulation. In most States (35 States and the District of Columbia), the responsibility to regulate SUD programs falls upon the Single State Agency (SSA) in charge of substance abuse treatment and prevention. In contrast, in only five States does the primary responsibility to regulate individual counselors fall upon the SSA. Rather, in 25 States, the duty to certify individual counselors is given to other governmental agencies; and in 20 States, this duty is given to non-governmental organizations affiliated with national credentialing bodies.

This report identifies which State or non-governmental agencies oversee SUD program and counselor licensure. Using the levels of care (or modalities) from the National Survey of Substance Abuse Treatment Services (N-SSATS), the report identifies the types of programs subject to SUD licensure in each State. In nearly all States (46 States and the District of Columbia), all programs are required to be licensed regardless of whether or not they receive State funding.

States structure their licensure standards in two main ways. Most commonly, 41 States and the District of Columbia have general requirements for all modalities, with additional specific requirements for certain modalities. Some States have additional requirements for nearly every modality, while others only have specific requirements for one or two modalities (particularly opioid treatment programs (OTPs)). In nine States, the requirements are structured so that each modality has specific requirements, and there are no general requirements.

Parallel content has been abstracted and summarized for substance abuse counselors. Based on SAMHSA's recently developed Career Ladder and Scope of Practice, this report identifies which levels of counselor credentialing are present in each State. Very few States currently have certifications at all five levels. A more detailed comparison is made for the fundamental credential for Category 3: Clinical Licensed Substance Use Disorder Counselors. In all States, credentialing requires a combination of formal educational requirements, experience, an examination and continuing educational requirements.

This report is a fundamental step in understanding the ways in which SUD programs and counselors are licensed and regulated, as well as the important role the SSA plays in this process. Given the impending changes in the national substance abuse treatment delivery financing and delivery systems, current information about the programs and professionals that constitute the publicly-supported treatment system is imperative. This report also highlights similarities and differences between the States in the regulation of the SUD treatment system, and is intended as a resource for additional, more detailed, studies in the future.

Introduction

Each of the 50 States and the District of Columbia regulate the licensure or certification of programs and individuals who offer specialty substance use disorder (SUD) treatment. This report compiled and developed an overview of States' regulations that govern the licensure and certification of these individuals and programs. Given the impending changes in the national substance abuse treatment financing and delivery systems, there is value to having current information about the programs and professionals that constitute the backbone of the publicly-supported treatment system. This work partially updates "A National Review of State Alcohol and Drug Treatment Programs and Certification Standards for Substance Abuse Counselors and Prevention Professionals" (published in 2005).

A majority of States (35 States and the District of Columbia) gives the responsibility for licensing or certifying SUD programs to the Agency responsible for the federal Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant. Some of these are distinct-purpose agencies, while others are broader agencies with additional responsibilities such as mental health and developmental disabilities. For historical reasons, we refer to this responsible Agency as the Single State Authority, or SSA, whether it is a distinct-purpose or a broader agency. However, in 15 other States, program licensure/certification is the responsibility of separate licensing Agencies/Bureaus that exercise oversight of a range of health providers, including substance abuse treatment facilities.

In contrast, 25 States delegate the responsibility to license or certify individual counselors to separate licensing Agencies/Bureaus oversee range of occupations, including substance abuse treatment counselors. Other States (20 States) work with a non-governmental agency to license or certify individual counselors. These agencies are aligned with national credentialing bodies, either the International Certification & Reciprocity Consortium (IC&RC) or the National Association of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors (NAADAC).

This report provides an overview of the nature and structure of State standards and requirements. The analysis does not describe the details of these requirements, but is instead intended as resource for further investigation by individuals and State agencies. In the appendix, we have provided electronic copies of the text of the regulations and additional documents bearing on licensure, certification and credentialing.

Methodology

To complete the analyses in this report, the respective agencies responsible for program and substance abuse counselor licensure were identified through an internet search in August 2011. If an internet search was unsuccessful or ambiguous, SSA staff were contacted for more information about licensing or certification policies and responsibilities. A list of the responsible agencies and the URL where the specific requirements for licensure/certification can be found are listed in Tables 1 and 2 ("Agencies Responsible for Program Certification/Licensure" and "Agencies Responsible for Individual Certification/Licensure").

Next, the text of the requirements for credentialing/licensing programs and individuals effective in August 2011 was acquired, and are being delivered separately due to the amount of material. The requirements include legislation, regulations, and documents created by the licensing body meant to give guidance to applicants.

Summary characteristics of regulations were also developed in August and September 2011 and are described in the tables. This report indicates the types of substance use disorder programs (or levels of care, or modalities) that are subject to SUD licensure using the typology of treatment modalities in the National Survey of Substance Abuse Treatment Services (N-SSATS). These levels of care include: hospital-based SUD treatment; long and short term residential treatment; intensive outpatient treatment; outpatient treatment; non-hospital detoxification; opioid treatment; and co-occurring facilities. Additionally, information was abstracted about whether the State has specific standards relating to staffing patterns, required “procedures” (such as “evidence based practices”), and data reporting requirements. The documents were reviewed in order to ascertain whether such requirements apply to all regulated modalities, or only for particular types.

Similar content was abstracted and summarized for substance abuse counselors. An attempt was made to cross-walk the different levels of individual certification/licensure in each State with the “categories” of substance use disorder counseling staff in the “Scope of Practice and Career Ladder” document developed in 2010-2011 by a consensus process supported by SAMHSA to propose a model typology of counselor credentials for adoption by each State. That document defined five levels of counseling staff and their educational and experience requirements, as well as their scope of practice (the clinical functions they are allowed to perform, either with or without supervision). These levels are as follows:

- Substance Abuse Technician is the entry level position. It requires no clinical experience, and has a highly restricted set of clinical activities the individual can perform, mainly under supervision.
- Category 1: Associate Substance Use Disorder Counselor, the next category, requires practitioners to have an Associate’s degree and includes a slightly expanded scope of practice.
- Category 2: Substance Use Disorder Counselors requires at least a Bachelor’s Degree; the individual has a broader scope of practice and is allowed to provide individual and group counseling.
- Category 3: Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselors can perform the entire range of clinical functions, although only in a licensed program under the supervision of a clinical director. Requires a Masters degree in counseling or a related field. May provide supervision to lower level staff.
- Category 4: Independent Substance Use Disorder Counselors can perform entire range of functions. Must have a Master’s Degree; is able to practice (and bill insurance) independently.

This report focuses on the requirements for Category 3 counselors, noting requirements for education and experience, continuing education, examination, whether there is a grandfathering clause, and if the certification body has defined a scope of practice. Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselors are examined because this position most closely resembles the most widely used and held credential in the field.

Findings

The following section and tables present basic descriptive information about the regulations that govern the licensure and certification of substance abuse programs and counselors in each State and the District of Columbia. These tables only indicate the presence or absence of requirements on a given subject for each State and DC, and do not describe the nature of the requirement. For licensure of programs, the tables summarize where standards exist created related to staffing patterns, required “procedures” and data reporting requirements. Parallel content was abstracted for substance abuse counselors and related professions. This includes the different types or levels of substance abuse counselor licensure in each State. For the most widely used SUD counseling credential, information is provided on formal educational requirements, experiential/supervised experience needed, and continuing educational requirements. Accompanying each table is a description and an indication of how each specific item was coded.

Agencies Responsible for Program Licensure

In 36 States and the District of Columbia, the SSA is responsible for the licensing or certification of all SUD treatment programs. In 13 States, another government agency has this responsibility, generally through a separate licensing agency/Bureau that exercises oversight of a range of health providers, including substance abuse treatment facilities. In two States, this responsibility is split between the SSA and another agency, depending on the modality of care. Table 1 (Overview of Agencies Responsible for Program Licensure) lists the name(s) of the agency/agencies in charge of licensing or certifying SUD treatment programs in each State. It also lists the URL where the licensure requirements can be found, and, in parentheses, the date on which the regulation or document was accessed. Electronic copies of these regulations have been collected and transmitted separately.

Agencies Responsible for Counselor Certification

In most States (25 States), there are separate State licensing agencies or boards that certify substance use disorder counselors as well as other health professionals. In five States, the SSA has primary responsibility for SUD counselor certification or licensure. However, in 20 States, reliance to certify counselors is made upon non-governmental organizations that are affiliated with national credentialing bodies. In Vermont, counselors are licensed by the SSA, but as an alternative may practice based on a certification from an International Certification & Reciprocity Consortium (IC&RC) affiliate in another State.

Table 2 (Overview of Agencies Responsible for Counselor Certification) lists the agency or organization(s) in charge of licensing or certifying individual SUD counselors in each State and lists the URL where the licensure requirements for counselors can be found. When licensure is conducted by a local non-governmental agency, this table notes the national credentialing body with which the agency is associated.

Program Licensure Overview

Table 3 on Program Licensure contains several types of information. First, it lists States for which regulations have been acquired and details the modalities covered in the regulations, and it also contains information on: (1) facilities that deliver co-occurring care (SUD and mental health) and (2) whether the State grants automatic licensure or “deemed status” to facilities that hold credentials from approved non-government accreditation boards.

Regulations have been located for about three quarters of States (37), and there are slight differences between States in which modalities have specific licensing regulations. Due to limitations of time, it was not possible to locate licensing regulations for all modalities of care in all States

In 46 States and the District of Columbia, all programs – regardless of whether or not they contract with the State – are required to be licensed or certified by the Single State Agency (Column A). In three States, only programs that contract with or receive funding from the State need to be SSA licensed or certified. If the standards only apply to facilities that contract with or receive funding from the State, this column is coded “Only State-funded Facilities.” In New Hampshire, opioid treatment and detoxification facilities must have State licensure, but for other modalities, only programs that have State funding are required to be licensed.

The following columns indicate the modalities for which a given State has specific standards. Just over half of States (21 of 37) require hospital inpatient facilities to have distinct licensure to treat SUDs (as opposed to general hospital licensure or accreditation). Identified regulations are indicated with an “X” in Column C. In contrast, licensure requirements for residential care were identified for 35 States, of which about half (18) had distinct regulations for both long-term and short-term care (defined as standard length of stay greater or less than 30 days), and half (17) only had a single set of standards. For these States, the word “Residential” is written across the Columns D and E.

Outpatient program licensure requirements have been identified for 36 States (29 of which have distinct requirements for both standard and “intensive” outpatient care). However, 7 States only appear to have a single level of licensure. Regulations for opioid treatment facilities have been acquired for 34 States, and detoxification facility regulations were identified for 37 States

Two further topics are coded in this table: co-occurring licensure and deemed status from accreditation. Regulations were found for licensure of co-occurring care for SUD and mental illness in just 14 States. States’ licensing requirements provide “deemed status” for facilities that hold accreditation or licensure from alternative bodies, such as the Joint Commission (18), the Commission on the Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities (15), the Council on Accreditation (10), or another entity (8) such as the State mental health licensing board.

Staffing Requirements

Regulations for SUD facilities have a variety of requirements specific to patterns of staffing. These range from the qualifications of the Director to the presence of certain types of staff and the ratio of staff to clients. Regulations were acquired for 37 States. The type of program for which each regulation applies is indicated in each cell (e.g., OTP, hospital based (HB) or long or short-term residential (LTR, STR)). This is summarized in Table 4.

Only about half of States (19) set standards for the program director. More frequently, almost 80 percent of States have a requirement for having a Medical Director. However, this primarily applies to opioid treatment programs and occasionally is required for hospital-based, residential, and detoxification programs. Set standards are infrequent for outpatient programs. In facilities other than OTPs and hospitals, the Medical Director is generally not required to be a medical doctor.

An alternative is a requirement that a facility have a prescribing professional on site at least weekly in order to provide diagnoses and prescribe medications (for methadone, buprenorphine, alcohol medications or even psychotropic medications). There are only half a dozen that have this requirement for any program other than an OTP, a detoxification program, or a hospital based program.

Counseling staff is the other topic for which States have set standards. 29 States require that there be a supervisor of the counseling staff, and that staff shall be a “fully credentialed counselor.” About half of States have standards for the ratio of counseling staff to clients.

Required Clinical Procedures

Table 5 describes whether the State includes requirements about specific procedures that providers must perform. Each cell on this Table lists the levels of care for which the requirements apply. Requirements for specific levels of care or types of facilities are denoted using abbreviations for each modality that is listed at the top of the chart.

The most common requirement for clinical procedures is that treatment and discharge plans be developed for each admission (48 and 38 States, respectively). For the vast majority of States with these requirements, these plans must be created in all types of modalities of care. It appears that only a fraction of States (10) requires providers to perform follow-up or give aftercare services, at least in the regulations.

A significant majority of States (38) requires licensed providers to undertake quality improvement procedures. This requirement is almost always imposed on all modalities of care, although in some cases, only OTPs or co-occurring licensed facilities have this requirement.

Standardized assessments are only included in licensing regulations for a fraction of States. SAMHSA has determined through their periodic Technical Reviews of SSAs that virtually all require new clients to receive an assessment in order to determine the required level of care (the ASAM patient placement criteria are employed by a large majority). Even though most States collect data on need of admitted clients for mental health services (as reported through the Treatment Episode Data System), this does not appear in licensing regulations. It seems likely that assessment procedure requirements are alternatively conveyed through contracts.

Data Reporting Requirements

Licensing regulations are inconsistent tools to examine data reporting requirements imposed by State agencies. Data reporting is required for some or all licensed providers by about two-thirds of States. In 25 States, all licensed providers are required to report data; the other 8 States only require reporting from providers that receive State (or State-managed federal Block Grant) funding. In 26 States, there is no description of the nature or specifics of data reporting requirements included in regulations.

Table 6 indicates whether the State includes requirements about data reporting that programs must provide to the SSA as part of licensure requirements. Despite the lack of data reporting requirements in the regulations, it should be noted that every State must require providers who receive SAPT funding from the SSA to report the Treatment Episode Data Set (TEDS) minimum data set. If a State does not specify data reporting requirements as a part of the licensure process it is noted in this table as “Data Reporting Requirement Not Described in Licensure”.

Types of Substance Abuse Counseling Licensing/Certification

There is a great deal of variation across the States in the credentials for substance abuse counselors. Only recently has SAMHSA supported the efforts of the field to realize greater consistency across the States and credentialing bodies in the licenses that are available and in the approved “scope of practice” (the clinical roles that can be performed) and in the qualifications. SAMHSA supported a Consensus Group meeting to work toward a “scope of practice” for substance abuse counseling. While two national substance abuse counselor credentialing bodies have worked on this for years, there is still a great distance to go.

The SAMHSA Consensus Group “scopes of practice” represents a proposed national framework. It proposes that there be a core professional credential (Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselor), accompanied by a credential for supervisors and other advanced counselors, and credentials for junior counselors, and counselors in training and “technicians.” The technician credential is conceptualized as a way to professionalize and standardize the role of persons in recovery that have little or no professional training in counseling skills. Table 7 presents the counseling credentials available in each State, organized by the SAMSHA Consensus Group categories (if there is a State equivalent for the Consensus Group category).

At the present time, in all States and DC, the accrediting body has an equivalent certification to SAMHSA’s Category 3: Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselor. In 28 States and the District of Columbia the accrediting body has an equivalent certification to SAMHSA’s Category 4: Independent Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselor/Supervisor. In 31 States, the accrediting body has an equivalent certification to SAMHSA’s Category 2: Substance Use Disorder Counselor level. In 23 States, the accrediting body has an equivalent certification to SAMHSA’s Category 1: Associate Substance Use Disorder Counselor level. 12 States have an equivalent certification to SAMHSA’s Substance Use Disorder Technician.

State Requirements for Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselors

Table 8 summarizes information about State-specific requirements for Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselors (Category 3). It lists the State-specific license title that meets the definition of a Certified Substance Abuse Counselor license and identifies whether or not the licensing requirements indicate specific standards to earn and then retain the credential.

The fundamental requirements for earning the Clinical Substance Use Disorder Counselor are: specific formal education requirements, supervision/experience requirements to become certified, testing and continuing education requirements to stay certified. All State credentials have minimum educational requirements, a minimum amount of supervised work experience as a junior counselor, and a standardized test. About three quarters of States use or require the IC&RC test, and the other States use the NAADAC test and/or require a test specific to their test. The other standards are defined in the regulations, and have not been summarized in this document.

Only 11 States had Grandfathering Clauses, a provision that allows counselors to be certified without fulfilling all of the requirements if they have been practicing and licensed under the prior standards for a certain amount of time. If there is/was a specific grandfathering period that is now over, this box will note the date of the end of the grandfathering period. Scope of Practice has been defined in 22 States for professionals with the core credential for of Certified Substance Abuse Counselors.
